Much Put Up With by the Animals That Ad

vertise the Farriers. There are some wild animals in this town hat have a pretty hard time of it. They are the bears and wolves and foxes that sit up on pedestals from one year's end to the other and keep guard over the entrance to fur stores. For the furrier's patient advertisement the slements have no mercy. In summer the sun beats down relentlessly upon its hairy hide, and the winds and storms of winter are never tempered to the unshorn beast of the forest alizing effect upon the hirsute adornment of the docile fur store sign, and it looks as ragged and scarred as if it had been scratching its back against jungle trees for half a century Instead of smiling benignly upon New York shoppers. The proprietor of a Broadway ONE LOT store whose trademark is now wearing its shoppers. The proprietor of a Broadway store whose trademark is now wearing its furry attre in irregular spots, patted the rambant beast affectionately the other day and expatiated on the animal's merits.

"Poor old follow," he said, "he ought to begin to look somewhat patchy by this time. He has served me for twenty-five years," "Twenty-five years?" repeated the visitor. I didn't suppose a fur store advertisement has made of good enough material to last a buarter of a century."

The furrier poked his finger playfully in between the two rows of Bruin's white teeth. Now, he said, "that is a mistake that reople are very ant to make. They think an advertising animal is patched together out of most two old thing. But he is not. His hide is genuine, and when he begins life as a show figure he is one of the best products of the asidermiat's skill. Take this bear, for an example. When he was new he cost $75. He bught not to be in such a dilapidated condition to-day, for a perfectly dressed animal will last fifty years, even though exposed to all sorts and conditions of weather. But this poor old hap has had to bear the brunt of many a battle, the is in a conspicuous place, where everybody who goes past can give him a sportive dig in the ribs, and this it is that has caused his hide take on an eruptive appearance. But he was a fine specimen to start with, as anybody 2n see with half an eye. A few dealers who copy when they first start into business, that he can economize on their show figures and set along with something cheap. They soon realize their mistake, however, and change their signs along with their minds, with the result that the very best figures turned out by New York taxidermists to-day are considered none too good for advertising purposes."

Says Select Guardians Are Bankrupt.

nger C. Sorenson began an action against the Society of Select Guardians to recover the amount of an investment fund, and the matter was rejected to Sanders Shanks. He has made his report in which he finds that Mrs. Sorenson is entitled to $1,000. But he says the society is insolvent. He also finds in the case of Charles Larsen that Larsen is entitled to $024.

The Persignanos, the Newark police allege, have been circumventing the authorities of the Eric Railroad, and at the same time violating the laws of New Jersey concerning the transport of combustibles, by sending freworks to this city packed in trunks as baggage. One of the trunks exploded a week ago in Trenton, N. J., and the man handling it lost his right arm. "Celluloid collars have been made for twenty-five years or more, but never in such perfection and variety as now. As far as appearances go, you couldn't tell nowadays, unless you were to get up close to it, and inspect it carefully, whethe a man's collar was celluloid or not. Celluloid collars, you understand, are now made not only in all sizes, but also in dozens of styles, including the most up-to-date designs.

"More women wear celluloid collars nowadays than formerly. Celluloid collars are worn by children. Speaking generally, in proportion to the population, there are more celluloid collars worn in the country than in the city, but there are many worn in cities, by men, women and children. I don't mean to say that everybody on earth is wearing celluloid collars by any means; but there's a lot of 'em worn, and more and more of them sold all the time. It is an article of luxury, of utility and of economy. And celluloid collars are exported to Europe, South America and various other parts of the world.

""Of course there are celluloid cuffs, too, and in various styles, but the cuffs are not so commonly worn as the collars and, with fewer new styles produced in cuffs, there are correspondingly fewer sold. There are also made, in closed and in onen front, and in different styles as to size and manner of finish, celluloid shirt bosons." In the action brought by Margaret E.
